FROM COCOA TO CHOCOLATE

(A) Cacao trees grow in hot, wet countries near the equator, like Indonesia and Ghana. The trees are small, and the beans grow inside big pods. A lot of rain and sunshine is needed.

(B) When the pods are ripe, they are picked by workers. The beans are taken out and dried in the sun. Then they are sent to factories, where they are roasted and crushed into a brown paste. A little sugar is added, and for milk chocolate, some milk is mixed in too. Finally, the chocolate is poured into moulds and cooled.

(C) People all over the world love chocolate. Some chocolate is sweet and creamy, and some is dark and bitter. There are plenty of ways to eat it: in bars, cakes, drinks and ice cream.
